Aspects of the Media: Adaptation from One Medium to Another

[メディアの諸相：媒体・ジャンル間における題材の転用]

RECENTLY the “fake news” problem is ardently discussed and raises doubt about the media’s credibility, yet still we are surrounded by various forms of media and are eagerly consuming them every day.

Originally, media delivers a certain message to its intended target (audience/spectator). In works of art such as literature, music and film, that message is frequently quoted (sometimes altered deliberately) and retold. Similarly, in daily life we receive information and share it with others by retelling, quoting, even dramatizing it. In such a process, the relation between the sender and receiver, in other words, “subject” and “object”, is often inverted.

In this workshop named “Aspects of the Media: Adaptation from One Medium to Another”, we will discuss how a subject in one form of media is transformed into another, and analyse the creative purpose involved and new meaning thus generated. We welcome Dr Griseldis Kirsch, Senior Lecturer in Contemporary Japanese Culture at SOAS University of London to deliver a lecture on the creation of media franchises based on literary works, and to comment on a series of presentations by young researchers based in Kobe and Osaka.
